I would like to say that as a disabled person who happens to be a ham. I am working on my code so I can upgrade to general (possibly extra class someday.
It is hard for me to cocentrate on the code, but I am not giving up. It would be nice to see the code requirement dropped. They're are so many other forms of communication out there that code is just not being used any more. I believe that the last time code was used was in 1995. Eight years have passed since any government agency has used code for any reason. Lets get with the 21st. century, not that I'm going to stop trying to learn code, but it would sure be a big help if I didn't have to take the code test. Don't tell me to get a letter from my doctor saying that my disability is preventing me from taking the code test. Yes I could do that, but that would be cheating. Just eliminate part 1 and be said and done with it. Look at all these other countries that have done it. Anyway thats all I would like to say on the matter, it would be nice to drop the code test but till then I'm still studying. Thanks. Mark KE4WAF
